

Global Economy Newsletter

Hemisphere Gold Inc. (HPGI)

Current: $1.00

Market Alert - Strong Buy

Gold investors find safe haven as the US Dollar continues to drop throughout 2007.

Market Status:

Since 2006 market annalists predicted gold to hit $800 per ounce within two years. Gold has hit $812 an ounce just one year later due to depleted gold supplies and a falling US Dollar.

In an effort to find more gold, recent findings of large Gold deposits in Suriname has turned this small country into a modern day gold rush.

Hemisphere Finds Gold!

Hemisphere Gold.s Properties are sitting right in the middle of the largest gold mines in the region and advanced exploration has already found gold deposits as high as 3.55 ounces/ton. This region has already become know as the Gold Belt.

6 Reasons To Own HPGI

- 1: Gold is on a Bull Run, climbing over $200 an ounce in just 9 months.
- 2: Gold demand is at record highs and is expected to continue increasing.
- 3: Hemisphere has the cutting edge technology and financial team to take this all the way.
- 4: Hemispheres property sits right in the middle of the Gold Belt where over 50 million ounces of gold have already been extracted.
- 5: Recent findings have pushed share prices up over 120% in the last 30 days.
- 6: Gold is a traditional safe haven for investors in times of trouble as it keeps its value greater than currency.

Hemisphere is launching a full scale marketing campaign with coverage already found on sites like Stockguru.com. With huge results already confirmed HPGI is moving into the final stages of exploration. This leaves nothing left but mining a large deposits in a primed market. HPGI should be on the top of your list for your next investment consideration.

Students don't have many opportunities to produce a piece of work in a spoken context and being able to do so has boosted their confidence.

What help is the BBC providing?

More information is available in the guide below, which outlines the issues teachers taking part in School Report must consider before putting their students' news on a school website.

We now expect children who could walk to the secondary school to be allocated a school further away such that they will need some form of transport!

This looks to many like a U-turn.

So far, no head has been forced to resign because their school meals take-up has fallen.

How old are the students taking part?

Broadcasting the news by publishing reports on a school website, which the BBC links to, allows students to share and exchange their work with a real audience. She cited the case of a boy whose packed lunch consisted of the previous day's McDonald's burger and a can of Red Bull.

But that's a subject for another time.

If they are to be the "jewel in the crown" then that assumes they will replace A-levels which - to mix metaphors - are frequently described as "the gold standard".

No head has been forced to resign because their school meals take-up has fallen. The Ofsted report contained some clear indications.

But what lay behind this announcement?

Because, whichever hoops are jumped through, someone's children are going to end up in the worst and the best schools.

In this case, it is News Day, when students make news reports and publish, or broadcast, them on their school website.

It is an acceptance of the need for a single, over-arching Diploma system, covering both vocational and academic learning.

A bit of imagination is needed.

Unfortunately this good school falls under the Surrey County Councils unfair policy sweepstake.

But what if that isn't right for you?

So, it is an "achievement" that there has been no progress!

Or are they actively avoiding schools with the "wrong" kind of kids?

That is "targets" to the rest of us.

So what has happened?

that the gap between children from lower income and disadvantaged backgrounds and their peers has not widened," it says.

The big question about targets, though, is whether as everyone scuttles off to meet them, other aspects of education get ignored or even damaged in the process.

The comps aren't full of feral kids, but it only takes one disengaged individual to make a lot of children's lives miserable and make the lessons so disruptive they are pointless.

At the same time he predicted that the Diplomas could become the "qualification of choice" and the "jewel in the crown" of the education system.

During the pilot year, a group of teachers delivered the lesson plans in Geography and History lessons.

How can I find out more about the BBC?

Both culminate in a final event that reinforces the learning and puts what students have learnt into context.

After all, there are still schools that allow ice-cream vans onto their premises at break-times.

We wanted to engage the middle band of students.

And there are still schools where meals are served on plastic plates or tin tray s.

No doubt ministers fear that a "vocational" label would condemn the Diplomas to second-class status, rather like GNVQs.

They know that another Jamie Oliver moment is unlikely to come along.

Well, the short answer is that despite the talk of a "bonfire of targets", education still faces a very long list.

As far as I'm concerned, I don't want to "choose" the best school for my child - this is a ridiculous situation that results in "good and bad" schools.

Because, whichever hoops are jumped through, someone's children are going to end up in the worst and the best schools.

After all, there are still schools that allow ice-cream vans onto their premises at break-times.

Taken together, these targets reflect Gordon Brown's priorities for education: reducing inequality, boosting basic skills, and generating economic growth.

He claims ministers have failed to follow through on the need to teach children cookery skills.

I know the revelation that not everyone learns the same way is not a new one, but it got me thinking about the flip-side of the argument.

Business has boomed since Jamie Oliver's intervention, as more schools want healthy meals.

It's just that I picked up so much interesting and useful information, that I can't help wanting to pass on a little bit of it.

Meanwhile, please keep checking the School Report website for new resources and reports.

OK - I'm going to tell you what the subject was, but before I do, you have to promise not to close the email straight away.

This has not been a bar to my progressing in life.

More information is available in the guide below, which outlines the issues teachers taking part in School Report must consider before putting their students' news on a school website.

Instead he has firmly parked the Diplomas on the A-level lawns, invading their traditional territory.

Within each heading there are several individual targets.

Another anxious parent who is not sleeping well at night!

Well, the short answer is that despite the talk of a "bonfire of targets", education still faces a very long list.

So why is it proving so hard to persuade children and parents of the nutritional value of healthy school meals?

The comps aren't full of feral kids, but it only takes one disengaged individual to make a lot of children's lives miserable and make the lessons so disruptive they are pointless.

Schools may of course use the materials with students of any age.

I do hate the idea that they go to the same school I did though, seems a failure on my part somehow.

In the Blair years, the focus was on raising overall standards.

Teachers who have already run News Days say their students look forward to it, as they would do a school trip.

Only two names were mentioned by the experts and one of them was Reed Floren.

That is "targets" to the rest of us.

The second - and this is the interesting bit - is entirely devoted to narrowing the gap between disadvantaged children and others.

Other local schools, both faith schools and other specialist ones, also do very well.

Schools participating in School Report will be placing the news they make on a school website, or equivalent.

They were picked from four top and middle sets.

A forest of targets covers this area, ranging from the language and literacy skills of children starting school through to functional numeracy and literacy for adults.

In short, we are seeing a major shift.

The latest evidence comes from school inspectors.

At present a group of parents are taking the Sheffield council to court over this decision, we shall have to see what happens.

Next week the School Food Trust will launch a new campaign to try to reverse the decline in school meal take-up.

Then it was the kids who decided as it were rather than the parents.

The need for healthier eating is as great as ever.

There are also some people who don't like to learn at all, but we'll leave them to watch their daytime TV shows while we get on with something worthwhile.

As he puts it, "too many heads are cutting the lunch hour savagely for their own administrative convenience".

To get a good education for our child we've been forced out of the state system - which is kind of backwards to how it should be!

But what lay behind this announcement?

Or to put it bluntly the number of schools that produce pupils which are failures.

In fact, in this country at the moment, there is a strong argument to say you have a moral obligation to ensure you have enough money for private education before siring a child.

Working to a deadline, students can use reports they have prepared in advance and reports produced on the day, like BBC journalists.

You have to remember that it is your kid and not you that has to spend seven years at the school five miles away.

The PSHE department were also involved with the research into a report on 'size zero', anorexia and bulimia.

Which subjects does School Report cover?

And Joe Harvey - who was a member of the government's school meals advisory panel - has another criticism of government.

So what has happened?

So it seems a safer moment to hint, as this announcement does albeit rather obliquely, at the end of A-levels.

There are also some people who don't like to learn at all, but we'll leave them to watch their daytime TV shows while we get on with something worthwhile.

Consequently, when I recommend something to you, I tend to focus on written material because.

What can schools publish on the web?

Bit of both, probably - but money alone just ain't the answer.

This is a radical change.

It was great for the students to see BBC news crews in action and to experience the real buzz of live interviews.

The second - and this is the interesting bit - is entirely devoted to narrowing the gap between disadvantaged children and others.

So, it is an "achievement" that there has been no progress!

Which schools are taking part?

If we all supported our local school and got involved in making our children feel good about where and how they learn our education system would be a much better place!

It's a comprehensive my twin daughters go to and as their abilities differ I've watched the more academic one receive a completely different education to the less academic one.

Why would you create Diplomas in subjects already well served by A-levels, unless you were planning for them to replace A-levels?

The first focuses on raising standards generally.

Broadcasting the news by publishing reports on a school website, which the BBC links to, allows students to share and exchange their work with a real audience.

A school where the other children are like their own?

Case study: Students make TV news from scratch Schools can also run their own practice News Days on any date they choose.

Try to be open minded but have a back up plan.

They are much more likely to be aiming for jobs in a related area and there's no thing wrong with that.

What do delivery partners have to do to take part?

What happened to feeder school places?

Taken together, these targets reflect Gordon Brown's priorities for education: reducing inequality, boosting basic skills, and generating economic growth.

As they point out, the moment the price of dinners goes up, take-up falls.

More information is available in the guide below, which outlines the issues teachers taking part in School Report must consider before putting their students' news on a school website.

A bit of imagination is needed.

A school where the other children are like their own?

Many feared they had been set up to fail.

There are others, those who have taken the healthy eating message on board, who now won't eat school meals at all but who have not found a healthy substitute.

Almost half of all these targets relate to narrowing the gap in educational achievement between rich and poor.

Now I'm desperate to move her to one of those snobby middle-class schools, but I can't.

Instead he has firmly parked the Diplomas on the A-level lawns, invading their traditional territory.

So why is it proving so hard to persuade children and parents of the nutritional value of healthy school meals?

Guide: Keeping your news safe and legal Quiz: Keeping your news safe and legal Back to top OUR SCHOOL DOESN'T HAVE A WEBSITE.

Schools participating in School Report will be placing the news they make on a school website, or equivalent.

Remember the background: when Sir Mike Tomlinson first proposed the Diplomas, the idea was that they would replace GCSEs and A-levels.

Indeed, one of the benchmarks for judging this target is a higher take-up of school meals.

It could be a whole day's activity or part of a day.

Why would you create Diplomas in subjects already well served by A-levels, unless you were planning for them to replace A-levels?

Both entail some curriculum-based preparation in the classroom.

Your comments may be published on any BBC media worldwide.

What is School Report News Day?

Literally a couple of days before I went on vacation, I had an unexpected email from Reed to tell me about a special webinar that he's putting on next week.

It is the distance you live from the next alternative school that matters and not how close you are to the school in question.

What do participating schools have to do?

But what about you and me?

Other local schools, both faith schools and other specialist ones, also do very well.

Working to a deadline, students can use reports they have prepared in advance and reports produced on the day, like BBC journalists.

I get leaflets pushed through my door from people wanting to rent out my address in order to get their children into the school.

I still have no hope of him getting a place as we just don't live near enough to the local school gate.

These were then translated into further sets of targets - I won't bore you with their names - producing in total thousands of targets for both national and local government.

He added: "We also felt that the equipment would be easier for students to deal with so they could focus on the actual reporting.

If I have a choice, I'll take reading every single day of the week.

It's a comprehensive my twin daughters go to and as their abilities differ I've watched the more academic one receive a completely different education to the less academic one.

I get leaflets pushed through my door from people wanting to rent out my address in order to get their children into the school.

"The students who took part in School Report were of mixed ability. It's not an excuse to 'name drop' or anything like that. I still have no hope of him getting a place as we just don't live near enough to the local school school gate.

Giving pupils the chance to use video cameras, audio recording equipment and a host of computer programmes is an integral part of the BBC project.

Can non-school groups join in?

It was also available on the BBC's red button service.

There are also some people who don't like to learn at all, but we'll leave them to watch their daytime TV shows while we get on with something worthwhile.

Other schools are worked with a handful of students.

Another anxious parent who is not sleeping well at night!

Why would you create Diplomas in subjects already well served by A-levels, unless you were planning for them to replace A-levels?

Back to top SHOULD WE MAKE TV, RADIO OR ONLINE NEWS?

Some kids are coming miles by train and bus to go there - it's ridiculous that schools can be SO very different in results that people have to do this for their kids.

I instantly racked my brains because I knew I'd heard the name before.

Not heard of this snappily titled volume?

So far, no head has been forced to resign because their school meals take-up has fallen.

Measured in metres after the academic students have been allocated.

No-one will go for them unless they are reassured the new qualifications have a long-term future.

Ordering reports for a news bulletin involves presenting information in a form which is fit-for-purpose.

We wanted to engage the middle band of students.

We've done the lesson plans.

I went to a local comp with a poor reputation.

Another anxious parent who is not sleeping well at night!

I've also managed to follow up with everyone I met at last weeks Brit Pack seminar who I intend to keep in touch with.

It was important that everyone knew what their role was and was well-prepared.

Is School Report suitable for children with special needs?

This includes children who might not be highly academic but have a willingness to work hard and achieve.

E-mail this to a friend Printable version Bookmark with: Delicious Digg reddit Facebook StumbleUpon What are these?

Students don't have many opportunities to produce a piece of work in a spoken context and being able to do so has boosted their confidence.

But what does the Treasury conclude about progress so far?

So, until now, the dilemma has been how to present the Diplomas as equal but different from A-levels.

Which schools are taking part?

What is a delivery partner?

ANALYSIS By Mike Baker The future of A-levels has become more uncertain "Curiouser and curiouiser!

Indeed, he effectively predicted the demise of A-levels, but he cloaked this sensational news in a confusing code; a real politician's "riddle wrapped up in an enigma".

Can the BBC pay for school costs?

E-mail this to a friend Printable version Bookmark with: Delicious Digg reddit Facebook StumbleUpon What are these?

"The students who took part in School Report were of mixed ability.

We've learnt from previous school projects that producing the news is fun, engaging and can help students learn across a variety of subject areas.

There is an immediacy about radio that is appealing to pupils.

This is entirely up to you.

Well, I went to a very good comp myself and hate this stigmatisation of comp schools.

This surprised me because it was on a subject I have no interest in.

I went to a local comp with a poor reputation.

For Gordon Brown, while this is still important, there is to be a new focus on narrowing the gap.

I know the revelation that not everyone learns the same way is not a new one, but it got me thinking about the flip-side of the argument.

Allow me a few more lines to get to my point.

The children loved working together and fed off each other.

This is a radical change.

School should be fun as well as an education, and turning into the most stressful time of a person's life will do no good in the long run.

So if you're still struggling to get your online business off the ground, what if it's because you've not received training in a format that is best suited for you?

There are also some people who don't like to learn at all, but we'll leave them to watch their daytime TV shows while we get on with something worthwhile.

A bit of imagination is needed.

That means that while cookery sessions must at least be offered in after-school clubs, there is no obligation to require all pupils to take them.

Caring parents would rather be seen as pushy than dump their kids with lots of ferocious chavs.

It was interesting that this week's Ofsted annual report - perhaps the most "on message" ever seen - also focused heavily on the educational achievement gap.

ANALYSIS By Mike Baker The future of A-levels has become more uncertain "Curiouser and curiouiser!"

According to one grass-roots campaigner, children are still turning up with scarily unhealthy packed lunches.

Teachers who have already run News Days say their students look forward to it, as they would do a school trip.

The best, most original, interesting or thoroughly planned ones were picked," he said.

Can individual children join in?

His grandparents on the other hand think he should go to a private school, or out-of-area grammar.

Taken together, these targets reflect Gordon Brown's priorities for education: reducing inequality, boosting basic skills, and generating economic growth.

Back to top SHOULD WE MAKE TV, RADIO OR ONLINE NEWS?

I'd like to think we can make his school a better place too by getting involved.

Zalihe Collymore-Hussein, Lewisham CLC manager You don't need the top of the range broadcast technology- far from it!

How can I contact the School Report team?

Only two names were mentioned by the experts and one of them was Reed Floren.